The ceremony took place in the parlor, which was beautifully decorated with greenery, pink sweet peas, roses and other flowers. The ceremony was performed by Rabbi Abram Brill in the presence of a large number of guests. Miss Erma Wallerstein, of Richmond, a sister of the groom, was maid of honor, and little Miss Pauline Harriet Beckman, a cousin of the bride, was flower girl. ANOTHER MARRIAGE IN BATTLE ABBEY

Miss Grace Will Wed Captain of Hussars in Famous Building.

BY LA MARQUESE DE FONTENAY.
BATTLE ABBEY, built by William the Conqueror, and richly endowed in order that the monks should perpetually pray for the souls of those Norman knights who fell at the battle of Hastings, is about to be the scene of another of those Anglo-American marriages that have become so frequent since the day when the abbey was acquired on a long lease by Michael J. Grace, of New York, from its then owner, Captain Forester. Mr. Grace's youngest daughter, Gladys, is about to wed Captain Hamilton Grace of the 14th Hussars, thus following the example of several of her sisters, notably Helena, who became the wife of the Earl of Donoughmore.

Battle Abbey remained in the possession of the monks from the eleventh century until the reign of Henry VIII, who expelled the monks and its lands presented the abbey and its lands to his favorite, Sir Anthony Browne, Master of the Horse, and Knight of the Garter. The story goes that Sir Anthony was celebrating his housewarming in the Abbey's hall, when a monk suddenly appeared, no one knew whence, and pronounced a solemn benediction upon the apostle of the church. He warned Sir Anthony that the curse would cling to his most remote posterity, and foretold the special doom that was to be their temporal punishment. "By fire and water," he cried, "your line shall come to an end, and perish out of the land."

So continuous were the misfortunes that befell the Browne family, that in order to escape them, they sold Battle Abbey, in 1719, to Sir Thomas Webster, an alderman and cloth merchant of the City of London. The Browns, however, did not remain a few miles away, but became extinct through the death of the eighth and last of the Browne Lords, Montagu, of the House of Salisbury, in the hundred years ago. On the same day his two nephews, the sons of his sister, the Hon. Mrs. Stephen Browne, were drowned in the sea at Bognor, before her eyes. Still on the same day, Cowdray Castle was almost totally destroyed by fire, so that the monks' curse seemed to have borne fruit.

The castle was again burned during its subsequent possession by the late Earl of Esmont, on which occasion the late Sir William the Conqueror, brought thither from Battle Abbey by the Browns, disappeared in the flames. He died, it is now the home of the Websters, and the castle is a ruin, who has so many interests in the United States and Mexico, and who, by his personal efforts, has secured, chose as his title that of Lord Cowdray.

One of the most famous of the Websters of the Battle Abbey, was Miss Elizabeth Vassall, a native of Massachusetts, born in the house which she afterwards became home of her father, and who inherited a very large fortune from an uncle in Jamaica.

Easy Aids to Good Looks

"After motoring or golfing, the hair may be dusty—with no time for washing the head. In this dilemma you will find a good friend. Put four ounces of powdered orris root in a fruit jar and add an original package of Therox. Shake together and rub a little on the head and brush through the hair. Therox removes dust, oil and dandruff, and leaves the hair light, fluffy and easy to do up."

"Disfiguring wild hairs can be made to vanish quickly from face or forehead by applying delicate paste, made by mixing powdered orris root with water. Cover the hairy surface with this paste for a minute or two, then remove with the skin, and the hairs will be gone."

"Short and thin eyelashes detract from otherwise beautiful eyes. Weak and straggly lashes can be strengthened if plain pyroxin is applied to the lash roots with thumb and forefinger. Thin eyebrows always improve with daily applications of pyroxin."

"A complexion cannot be duty if the skin is itching from perspiration. A comely face can be kept clear of rub or show like powder is made easily by dissolving an original package of mayonaise in a half pint of white haze. This holds and does not smear. Gently massage with this solution daily, and the skin will be soft and satiny, velvety and smooth."

She married first Sir Godfrey Webster, a man twenty-three years her senior, but deserted him for Lord Holland, her second husband, the latter resulting in a divorce by Act of Parliament. Years later, the children of the Webster marriage, a boy and girl, being quarreled with by Godfrey, the father, but Lady Holland, as she had then become, while she restored the boy to his father, declined to part with the girl, and in gratitude for the father's restoration, she wrote to Sir Godfrey from the continent that the child had been taken to her, and she had been the father's death. There was a mock funeral and a kid was buried in the coffin in place of the child. The father, however, later, either Lady Holland's conscience smote her, or Sir Godfrey became suspicious, for his daughter was restored to him and lived to become the wife of Admiral Sir Fleetwood Pellew, their only child marrying the fourth Earl of Oxford.

Lady Holland, it may be recalled, became one of the greatest social powers in London, and Holland House became the headquarters of the literary life in the first half of the nineteenth century. Yet in spite of her position, she was not a woman who exercised in her behalf by all sorts of great personages, she remained barred from court as a divorcee to the very end of her days.

The successor of her first husband, Sir Godfrey Webster, at Battle Abbey, squandered his wealth, was unable to support his family, and died in 1845. It was sold to Lord Harry Vane, afterwards Duke of Cleveland, and in 1846 it was sold to Lord Rosebery, the father of Lord Rosebery. The Duke, who survived her husband for many years, bequeathed the abbey to her nephew, Captain Forester, who eventually sold it for over a million dollars to the present chief of the house, Lord Augustus, who is the baronet of his line, who was enabled to purchase it by his marriage to the heiress of Henry Grosvenor, of Halifax, one of the great carpet manufacturers of the north—subject, however, to the lease of Michael Grace, who had rented it from Captain Forester. The Duke, several years to run, and not until its conclusion will Sir Augustus be able to resume occupation of his ancestral home.

A curious question has arisen in England in connection with the proposed sale of the abbey, which is now in the hands of the Duke of Rutus Isaac, to a seat in the cabinet, a preference without precedent, at any time in modern times. The Duke's General receives a salary of $10,000 a year, and is allowed to continue his private practice of law, so that what would be a very large income usually amounts to between $10,000 and $15,000. Indeed, the position, with its emoluments and opportunities, has always been regarded as one of the most lucrative in the gift of the crown. The Attorney-General, moreover, is regarded as the leader of the English bar.

Now the successive cabinets during the last ten years have usually included some lawyer of high standing, who have by a sort of unwritten law, been compelled to abandon their private practice while in office—a rule, by the way, which is force in other European countries, notably in France, where the present Premier, M. Poincare, was obliged to sacrifice his immensely valuable legal business—the largest in France—when he became Premier with a salary of $10,000 a year.

It is argued that if Sir Rufus Isaac, now that he is in the cabinet, is allowed to continue his private practice, there is no reason why Premier Asquith, Secretaries of the Home and War, and the Secretary for the Home Department, should not be permitted to do likewise. It would, in fact, be setting a precedent dangerous to the State.

On the other hand, in England the Attorney-General exercises in some respects judicial prerogatives, more important than those of the Lord High Chancellor. Thus, when a man is tried for his life, and convicted, he cannot take advantage of that error unless he obtains the fiat of the Attorney-General, and the same permission must be obtained before a man can present his claim to a peerage before the Committee of Privileges of the House of Lords. The Attorney-General has the power in criminal cases of entering a "nolle prosequi," or prohibition to prosecute. Over the last ten years, however, it has been important, no court in the realm has any control or jurisdiction.

It is therefore advisable that an official of such high judicial powers should, as a member of the cabinet, be exposed to the suspicion of being swayed by political considerations. (Copyright, 1912, by the Brentwood Company.)
